ESTATE MARKET

SEVERAL BIG DEALS DURING THE WEEK NOT MADE PUBLIC.

Washington-Street Property Sold for $19,000-Plans of Architects-The Transfers.

The real-estate transfers filed in the recorder's office last week showed no activity in the real-estate market, but real-estate men say there is a "better feeling" in all quarters. For several weeks the records show a dull market, but this does not always indicate that no business is being done. Almost without exception a large deal is suppressed for reasons known to the purchaser until he sees fit to make it public. Last week there were several big transactions in real estate, but the transfers will not be made public. This accounts for the records indicate. One of the big deals of the week that was closed yesterday afternoon was the sale of the four-story stone building at Nos. 417-419 East Washington street by the Mrs. Peter Gramling heirs to F. W. Ballweg, of Ballweg & Co., box manufacturers. The consideration was $19,000. The sale was made through the John G. McCullough agency. x x x

Architect C. E. Bates is preparing plans for the new building to be erected by the Knights and Ladies of Honor. The building is to be a three-story fireproof structure, 50x109 feet. Provision may also be made in the plans to allow an addition of one or more stories for office purposes, if the order so decides. The first floor of the building is to be used for storerooms, the second for the offices of the Supreme Lodge and the third for general lodge purposes On this floor will be a large assembly room, 50x90 feet. The cost of the building is estimated at $40,000. The lodge is looking for a location for the building, which will likely be midway between the business and resi-

OMAHA VETERAN WHO ONCE DI-VIDED LUNCH WITH LINCOLN.

a Cigar Under Ordnance Rules -The "Old Duffer."

Here in Omaha is an old soldier of the war of the rebellion who had two strange experiences during his term of service, for which he would not take a great deal. On one occasion he divided his lunch of hardtack and cheese with President Lincoln without having the slightest notion of the identity of the sharer of his hospitality, and at another time he threatened to throw General Grant into the river because that inveterate smoker showed some tardiness in throwing away a cigar in a place where smoking was forbidden.

In the first instance Joe Perkins was commanding a dispatch boat carrying dispatches to General Butler. One day when the Sawyer gun was to be tested for the first time at Fortress Monroe, Perkins arrived with a packet of dispatches for the general. He was informed that Butler, with his staff and a lot of visitors from Washington, had gone over to the riprap to witness the trial of the new gun. So Perkins set out in his dispatch boat, the Constitution, of Philadelphia, and soon

General Butler was busy at the time and after ascertaining that there was nothing urgent, asked the dispatch bearer to await a moment of greater leisure. The young | 118-122 E. Market. soldier, seeing that it was about noon, and | REAL ESTATEbeing exceedingly hungry, slipped away to a secluded part of the stone work, thinking to get in behind some high stone piers and snatch a light lunch unobserved. He found the entrance to his intended retreat blocked by a marvelously tall and leanly lank man clad like a funeral director, all in a sombre dingy black, his head surmounted by a rusty stovepipe hat, itself longer, and leaner, and tankier than any one usually saw, even in that time. His face was thin and full of cavernous hollows. He had, apparently, discarded his barber for several days. He gazed steadfastly out to sea, and seemed lost in thought, so much so that he hardly appeared to notice the young soldier as he crowded by to get further into the niche in the stone wall. THE OLD DUFFER. "Well, now, if that isn't the funniest old duffer I ever saw in all of my life,' thought Perkins as he settled down and opened his haversack. Out came a couple of hardtack and a generous hunk of cheese. At the first sniff of the penetrating odor the "old duffer" turned his head and asked The lots have a frontage of 80 feet and are | in a strangely winning and gentle voice for one of such a rough appearance, "Young man, could you divide a bit of your lunch with me?

Instantly Perkins fished out three hardtack from his haversack, peeled back the rind from the piece of cheese with his jackknife and called cheerily, "Say when and I'll cut her off." 'When," said the "old duffer" with smile that split his face into a hundred wrinkles and took the proffered cheese from the point of the jackknife. After the dinner the visitors to the riprap were ready to go back. Then it was found that Perkins had plenty of room in his launch and General Butler and his staff boarded it. "And bless my heart." says Perkins, "if that old long fellow in black didn't climb aboard, too. It didn't make any particular difference to me, though, whether he rode across in my boat or not. He seemed to pay little attention to what was going on about him. He had a far-away look in his eyes and gazed out across the water in a preoccupied sort of a way nearly all the time we were mak-After the landing, and when General ing the run." Butler and his staff had repaired to their headquarters the commander called for patches. "I went into a room," says Mr. Perkins. "The general was sitting at his desk and his officers were sitting about the room, and, bless my soul, if there wasn't that lank old fellow in black again, sitting close to the general. I passed the dispatches around to the officers to whom they were adressed, when General Butler half looked up and growled in his queer "Young man, step around here and way. shake hands with the President of the United States. Well, as true as I live, even then I did not suspect what was up. I thought the general, who had a great reputation for a | town, good condition; $1,500, new, 5 rooms, Blair practical joker, was making game of me. I must have shown my bewilderment, for 61,175.00 a long, brown hand with heavily veined and muscled gaunt fingers was thrust out 18,365,00 across the desk past the general and clasped mine, and I heard the gentle voice again saying, 'Yes, this young man and I have met before. He divided his lunch with me this morning.

"Well, you could have knocked me down with a feather. If there had been a knothole in the floor I could have gone through it like a ramrod. I felt so foolish that I could hardly find my voice, and I got out of that place as soon as I could, I can tell

MET GRANT ALSO. Perkins's encounter with General Grant was some time later. He was at the time In charge of an ordnance launch landed close to City Point. It was the same launch | REAL ESTATEand the same cargo of ammunition, by the way, that was instrumental in blowing up City Point in the memorable explosion shortly after. The boat was tied up to the bank. A gangplank ran across to shore and a sentry on the boat passed back and forth and forbade any to board the launch | DO NOT FAIL TO LOOK THIS UP without some show of authority. Perkins had relieved the sentry for a short time. He stood with one foot on the board to give him warning of the approach of any one along the narrow plank, looking out across the river to where a stranded steamer was being worked off the bar. Suddenly he felt a jar on the board and turning quickly saw a heavy-set, broadshouldered man of powerful physique, dressed in civilian clothes and a slouch hat, coming toward him over the plank, his mouth was a half-smoked cigar upon which he was pulling with a very apparent satisfaction. "You'll have to chuck that cigar overboard; you can't smoke here," called Per- | and Natural Gas paid. kins. "All right," said the man in reply, and

Perkins turned once more to watch the 350.60 steamer. The next moment, however, he turned quickly. His visitor was half way across the plank and he still smoked the forbidden cigar. Quick as a flash Perkins stooped and lifting the gangplank in his hands, cried sternly, "Now ditch that cigar or into the water you go. "Hold on young fellow, don't dump me into the river," expostulated the stranger. balancing uncertainly on the swaying plank; but his words were simultaneous with the sizzle of the cigar in the river. and the man came aboard without mishap. Then asking to see one of the ordnance officers he disappeared below into one of the cabins. Some time after that Perkins went below, and entering the cabin threw himself down upon one of the long wall seats and watched the strange man looking over the books and accounts of the ordnance office. Finally one of the officers entered and turning half curiously to Perkins asked, "Didn't you see General Grant come aboard a little while ago?" "'Oh, no, General Grant hasn't been around here,' replied Perkins with superb self-confidence " 'There is where you are mistaken,' returned the officer, while the man at the desk looked up from the books with a flicker of a smile playing about his mouth. 'General Grant came aboard twenty minutes ago and came down into the cabin "'Yes, and this man here tried to throw me into the river,' growled the man at the desk. And then the identity of the stranger began to dawn upon the astonished soldier. 'He did,' exclaimed the officer indignantly. "'Oh, but that was all right,' replied FOR SALE OR EXCHANGE-Good farm ninetyaway-the last one I had, you see-and he was very properly going to dump me into the river And that is how one man met two of the most famous men of his day.
